

Poem for Amy Winehouse

by Darryl Price

Last night I spoke to the universe on your behalf. I don't know if anyone understood my plea, but I did, I knew what I meant, heard myself implore the cosmic stuffing we're all fluffed out of to please give you a second chance at life's happiness, even if that's impossible, the sad self invoking the power of my own being to befriend you beyond the mortal, so much so that whatever you are now, wherever you exist, it can be felt as real, a gift from a flower, as Donovan put it, to a garden. It's mine to give. Last night I spoke your name to the universe, in a kind of prayer, for you to find your way to the place where love lives in all of us for always. If it doesn't matter one bit I don't care. It makes a difference to me.

Last night I spoke to the years gone by on your behalf. Bless you, I say, Amy. That's all I can say, but I say it with my whole person in agreement. And now I leave you for my own journey to continue

Available online at «<http://fictionaut.com/stories/darryl-price/poem-for-amy-winehouse>»

Copyright © 2015 Darryl Price. All rights reserved.

its own path through my destiny, but before I do, I thank you so much.

Bonus poems:

Damaged UFO

Came to a full stop. This is a jarring realization to a pilot as you can imagine. Flying by the seat of your pants is not really an option. It's over pretty quickly. I could see through the slits for my eyes you were already walking your way home without me. This hurt more than a broken heart. It would take some time to get up and get out of there before your men in their white uniforms showed up. You hear the pocketful of keys first, like a rattlesnake under a wooden stoop, then the helicopter blades, then the cocking of rifles. Better to disappear than be snagged by one of your so-called friends for examination or experimentation.

I limped off as best as I could, but the broken heart wouldn't stop buzzing inside my chest. Still somehow I made it away from the crash site without being detected. My ship was ruined beyond repair, but something of me lived, wished to smile again, in spite of the incredible pain. That's all I can manage here. There is no magic or science involved. It's been a day by day operation. Here's that kiss I borrowed.

The inside hanging universe

Is busy thudding its hardnosed blind Little digits on my swinging
Out of the way muted hat-less Head. I know this means something. It's All part of my sitting here on This particular red chair I Suppose. It's always amazed me

How the poems will find your space Even when you're deep inside your Own mind. I'm not waiting for that Sign from anyone anymore.
I'm just hanging out with Beirut
And waiting for it to snow like It means it. When I was in the Car before it started to sweep

A little miniature snow
Across the warm windshield like a Needy little shake of salt, but That quickly turned into a soft Cold walking rain instead. Why this Observation should matter to These particular words before Us now I don't know. Like I said

It means something, but I'm not sure I want to know the exact what Involved. Does everything have to Always be defined? Why can't some Things just be felt? I don't need an Explanation for loneliness.
Oh I'm sure that you've already Figured that ancient clue out by

Now. Life is a much better place With someone there to hold. Still a Cave is a cave and mine is as Empty as an abandoned nest Jammed between the naked forks in A frozen tree's forgotten stiff Upper branches. There's sun somewhere, But not much light. That about sums it.

