consolations

by David Ackley

we swim in failure and a weak grasp of the infinite the last good job poisoned by envy and strewn tacks a kind of fractured ease in this sinking you think of where you'd rather be Nothing.

those were the years of atomic submarines otherwise pleasant