

The King's Largesse

by David Ackley

This little town lost its mill and all the folk began to wail, “Our work has fled, our lives go ill.”
So the king in his kindness built them a jail.

For certain it is, when times are hard,
half the folk must turn to crime,
who, when they're sent to do their time,
the other half will serve to guard.

