Meteorology

by Gary Hardaway

Seasonal Surprise

We grow accustomed to the heat so the chill of late October comes as a surprise. A happy surprise. But the sweaters and light jackets are hidden deep behind the shorts and short sleeves. We shiver finding what we need to trap metabolic heat and shelter summer skin from wind.

Winter Mix

Among the raindrops occasional plopping snowflakes. Nothing accumulates but wet and miserable.

Snowfall a Little North of Dallas

The small snow decorates the air, accumulates on car tops and sidewalks, provides a topic of conversation.

Its rarity here excites the wide-eyed five year old in all of us stuck in offices far from hearth and cocoa this not quite last day of February, two thousand and fifteen.

A Clearing

Sunlight sparkles on the puddles. After a week of rain, a clarity.