

Soft Voices

by Tim G. Young

soft voices singing somewhere in the black back of rising tensions crashing with the waves inside loves refusals and betrayals join hands in the dim lights spilling every drink on fresh pressed clothes of linen and smooth perfect cotton while nighttime drinks its fill across sorry candle light drifting like fog through minds numbed but caught in forever thought morning kicks up another sad sight into swollen eyes inside a high fever burning its way through everything standing in its way blood brothers and loving sisters unable to escape myriad traps one inside the other soft voices singing somewhere live like the melody of centuries exposed suddenly all in the middle of the truth bringing lightning and thunder across the sacred universe waiting so silently waiting her eyes imploring compelling arrive with no restraints galloping forever in illusions untamed but filled to the gills within the imagination of new stories and new life strewn everywhere

