

In the Pink Distance

by Bill Yarrow

a mustached man with a broken arm is smoking a clove cigarette and reading Regis Debray

in the pink distance
a boy in a corduroy shirt sits before an upended electrical spindle and drinks a vodka gimlet

a young woman in a juice bar is dangling a strapless sandal from the end of a suntanned toe

a policeman in a checkered cap eyes four youths carrying a barricade

a paperback copy of The Will To Power leans against the Shocken edition of Kafka's Letters to Felice.

people gather in a downtown park to make origami boats and listen to flutes

a car becomes a kitchen a road becomes a map

a picnic table becomes a bed

lyricism is legion and everyone comes to believe participation is an expression of affection
