

55 words #4

by Bobbi Lurie

If only I could decipher the mightiness of the sword and put it into pen, I might free myself. But then again, I sought this duration of loss. I wrapped a fabric of lace around my body, stood stiffly at the garden party and asked to be captured.

(I drink with my thinking problem intact.)

