Tree Yaupon

by Gary Hardaway

She hates the yaupon especially in April when it flowers.

They drop, pale green and yellow, full of pollen, to cover the pool deck and coat the surface of the pool, a shrunken Sargasso Sea come inland.

They clog the skimmer basket and fill the small Polaris bag.

They track into the house in broken star shaped buds across the tile and carpets.

The yaupon is my favorite of our trees. I like its dome of leaves, its shading canopy above the grill. I hate the pool.

I want to drain it, punch big holes in it's peeling plaster bottom, fill it with crushed stone, sandy loam and top soil and plant three yaupons on an undulant, kidney shaped lawn of fescue and ivy.
