

Three Short Poems

by Kait Mauro

I welcome myself
back into the fires
that forged me.

I welcome myself back into the fires that forged me - hoping to emerge, yet again, stronger and full of less bullshit, more wisdom - with the parts of my little life I love most still intact.

* * *

Sometimes a person
need to get "out
of their head" and back into their body. Stretching is one way to do this - standing then sitting then standing again. Drink all of the water you can hold.

* * *

Sometimes anger
can be relief.
A decision is made -
no more not knowing
this path or that one,
no more trying to keep the peace, no more trying to keep every person happy.

Just this: no more.

