anura

by Kitty Boots

no bass tones from the spring in back of the house yet no meaty legs propelling themselves into the water with a plunk no jelly-like rafts floating on the water's surface no tadpoles not yet, it's early still too early to dodge leaping bodies on misty roads at night red eyes in the headlights or to look up, when weeding the garden lost in thought and music of a different era pounding in your head, worming through your ears and see a bright green body, white throat, big sticky toes friendly a sign of rain? another child? some sleep with them under their pillow others recoil in fear ribbit