

1973, what I wanted

by Paul Hargreaves

Not the torn magazine page, not the smell of ink, not the sweat of palm nor the froth of irish spring, but the real, the absolving, the enfolded whatever the fuck it actually was descending upon the front of me, embracing the tip of me, gorging the whole of me, eclipsing the epitome.

