

Lucky

by Teresa Tumminello Brader

Jane worked out of her new husband's suburban house, struggling to remember it belonged to her too. She shook off memories of years in a rented Mid-City shotgun, an old elevated dwelling that still seemed like home. It ended up with four feet of canal water inside. She drove by and saw the brown waterline.

